In the year 2018, the sports betting industry in the United States alone could see a $165 billion USD global sports betting market. The adoption of sports betting in the U.S. has brought about the rise of lotteries within the same field, and quite a few states have added sports betting marketplaces to their state-run lotteries in order to catch the attention of sports fans. According to Ben Arnold, a sports betting expert who was cited by Sky Sports, there was no formal license or supervision for gambling companies operating in the U.S. to prevent them from profiting on the sportbetting industry, which happened to be the case. This proved to be a hindrance to the development of this industry. Another drawback was the risk of underage gambling. Aside from the usual gambling activities taking place in casinos, a promising type of gambling is that which occurs on the computer and mobile phones. With the proliferation of gambling activities, there are increasing numbers of underage gamblers. The U.S. has the highest crime rate of any nation in the world. There has been a decline in the number of crimes committed by young people and the average age of the people committing those crimes is in its early 20s. The crime rate has also decreased over the past two decades. The crime rate has not yet decreased below 20 years of age, but it still drops with age. The reason for that is not that there is a decline in morality, but that the youth of today are adopting gambling activities too early. The number of crimes committed by young people is higher in the Northeast because the population density of the Northeast is higher than that of other places in the U.S. Over the past decade, America has seen the number of crimes committed by youth increase. This is because of the availability of television, the Internet, video games, and gambling sites in the Northeast. With the increase in crime, there is an increase in gang activities. Like any other industry, the increase in crime rates has benefited organized crime. In the past, there were numerous casinos in the Northeast, such as Atlantic City in New Jersey, and Massachusetts has also lost a number of casinos. While the increase in crime rates has been problematic, it has also helped the development of sports betting. With the establishment of more places where sports betting is legal, gambling activities that were very harmful have become less noticeable to people. This has minimized the number of crimes committed by young people. Another phenomenon of the gambling industry in the U.S.
