Five teenage girls have been arrested following an attempted rape in a high school restroom. Three of the girls are students at the school while the other two are not. According to the Tennessean, the 18-year-old victim told police that the attack happened at the school Wednesday afternoon. The victim told police that a 16-year-old boy walked in on her while she was washing her hands. WBBJ reports: Police said the girl told them that she was sexually assaulted after the boy closed the door to the rest room. Detectives say they were able to identify three of the suspects through social media postings on Facebook. The 17-year-old girl is not a student at the school, police said. The other two suspects are students. The suspect that police say assaulted the victim is not in custody, but the two teenagers who are the students at the school have been arrested and charged with aggravated sexual battery. Detectives are continuing to gather information as the case continues. No bond has been set for the teens. The boys face 10 years in prison. Influence of age and sex on risk of coronary artery disease in hypercholesterolemia. The incidence of coronary artery disease (CAD) and of hypercholesterolemia in a random urban population sample of 6,887 individuals from Hong Kong were evaluated. A logistic regression model, adjusted for risk factors, revealed that age is a major predictor of CAD (prevalence odds ratio = 1.7 for women and 2.7 for men), and that sex does not affect the prevalence of CAD. When serum cholesterol level and age are included in the model, neither cholesterol level nor age is an independent risk factor. 1.
