Fibroblast growth factor-1 (FGF-1) and fibroblast growth factor-9 (FGF-9) regulate hepatic growth during growth and development. Effects of protein-energy malnutrition (PEM) on FGF-1 and FGF-9 mRNA levels in livers were studied in rats. The content of FGF-1 and FGF-9 mRNA in the rat liver remained unchanged following PEM, but the ratio of the amounts of these mRNAs to total RNA was lower in rat livers subjected to PEM than in the controls. The present invention relates to data communications, and more particularly, to systems and methods for distributing location information associated with a mobile device. The Federal Communications Commission (FCC) has adopted a wireless 911 emergency telephone service for use within the United States in order to overcome existing system limitations that restrict emergency service operators from reaching all callers. Several types of wireless network systems have been developed by the FCC, including enhanced 9-1-1 systems, narrowband systems, as well as wireless wide area network (WWAN) systems. All of these various wireless systems pose unique challenges for mobile devices such as cellular phones, pagers, Personal Communication Service (PCS) phones and wireless Personal Data Assistant (PDAs) to communicate with a cellular or wireless network. The communications between the mobile devices and the cellular network will be referred to herein as emergency calls. The nature of wireless networks and emergency calls involving wireless devices leads to delays and difficulties in providing an effective wireless 911 emergency service. A wireless 911 system must be able to accommodate emergency calls from mobile devices using many different types of communications links and protocols. The various communications links include analog and digital cellular communications links using Advanced Mobile Phone Systems (AMPS), cellular Digital Cellular System (CDCS), Global System for Mobile Communications (GSM), or Code Division Multiple Access (CDMA) protocols. These different communications links and protocols are used in different geographic areas within the United States, with
