In the USA, influenza is one of the most common causes of outpatient visits for pain. Compared with other pain conditions, patients have the lowest satisfaction with the office-based care they receive. To determine the pain and health status of patients presenting to ambulatory clinics for influenza-like illnesses (ILIs) during a high-transmission season. In this population-based, prospective, cross-sectional study, we enrolled 809 adults with ILI at 9 randomly selected offices. We
