Intracranial air pressure has been recorded in 30 operations for ruptured aneurysms of the intracranial internal carotid artery, in 8 operations for aneurysms of the middle cerebral artery and in 10 operations in which the aneurysm was not treated. Intracranial air pressure recordings ranged from 2-122 mm Hg (mean 42.7 mm Hg). No correlation was found between intracranial air pressure and pH (r = 0.4; p = 0.1). In 8 patients there was an episode of hemorrhage, mainly to the parietal lobe, during the course of the operation. In 3 patients intracranial air pressure monitored during the operation showed a transient increase during the brain retraction. The increase was most probably due to an air exchange of the other side of the brain during the brain retraction. In 3 patients the intracranial air pressure recordings indicated a change in air pressure indicating a brain lesion during the operation. In the 8 patients where a multifactorial analysis of the intracranial pressure recordings was made, they were found to be caused by three separate events. These three events were: a) a large intracranial hemorrhage in the course of the operation, b) a decrease in arterial blood pressure to 65 mm Hg and c) a slight increase in intracranial air pressure. A large intracranial hemorrhage in the operation was the only event that was a direct cause of death in the 9 patients who had died in the course of the operations (38%)."The military is such a huge part of our life and to have the opportunity to be here is amazing," says Brittany Zobrist, one of the rookie models in the retail industry who had no idea she'd be modeling.
