Field of the Invention The present invention relates to a technique of detecting the number of persons which can sit at a table using a computer and various sensors. 2. Description of the Related Art Patent Literature 1 discloses a technique related to detecting information on a table or the like and then capturing a camera image including the detected information to detect a person sitting on the table. According to Patent Literature 1, the technique detects the information on the table from a camera image including a person face to generate the detected information, and recognizes the detected person face. Then, the technique identifies a seat of the person based on the detected information. Patent Literature 2 discloses a technique of recognizing a person sitting on the table from a camera image. According to the technique, a table body is detected from the camera image including the person's face, the detected table body is represented as a polygonal line, and the polygonal line is further represented as an image to be used as a feature amount of the face. Patent Literature 3 discloses a technique of detecting the number of persons on a table from a camera image. According to the technique, the table is detected from the camera image, and a ratio of the number of persons on the table to the total number of faces detected in the camera image is calculated. The number of persons on the table is determined in accordance with the ratio. Patent Literature 4 discloses a technique of detecting a person from a camera image. According to the technique, the table is first detected from the camera image, and then the person is detected in accordance with the detected table.
