The Crimean Peninsula, located in the north of the country, is looking to bid for their own inclusion in the Eurovision Song Contest. Although they have shown some good performances, they are unlikely to make it through the selection process, as they are the only country in the world not to be represented in the contest. But for many, Crimea's great music industry is a strong contender. The country has been described as the centrepiece of the music scene, providing a melting pot of cultures and musical styles. The first evidence of a Crimean Eurovision campaign comes in 2001, when a song by Lesya Sholokhova, "Просто скучишь", was selected from the country, although the Crimean bid was unsuccessful. In 2012, the Crimean Music Fund (MMF) decided to become an officially recognised musical association, putting forward some talented artists to represent the country at Eurovision. It was a brilliant decision as the MMF is also the only official record label in Crimea. So far, they have included Aleksandrs Antonenko, Veronika Nastasheva, Yuri and numerous other artists in their work, including It's About Time. After the win of Don't Write Home, It's About Time has been selling over a million albums, becoming one of the most successful Eurovision artists in the history of the contest. Through the music association, they promote contemporary and traditional musicians on their own record label. Unlike other artists in Ukraine, the most of the MMF's artists have been successfully releasing albums on their own. In 2012, the Association took advantage of the opportunity and entered Crimea in Eurovision with the song "Просто скучишь". Unfortunately, the choice was not successful. In 2013, the MMF announced that it would be launching its own national participation in the Eurovision Song Contest. Just like every year, they have selected a song with the help of the jury. This year's song is a joint effort with some outstanding Ukrainian artists.

They call it “В чем же спросить?” – “What is it about?” They would not say
