PicsArt is a whole new creative app that's all about making the most of your mobile phone; or one of the most. From handdrawn art to photo effects, we've got the tools you need to create new photo ideas. And now we're bringing some of our best tools to your mobile screen. So take a look, go nuts, and then share your new ideas with. Operating. Never miss a thing. Get updates when new content arrives. Push alerts to see what's. So you tell me: the Flash is really the Flash now Legends can come back to varying degrees of success. Sure, we can expect to see Batman, Wonder Woman, Iron Man and Thor back in comic book form someday. And the idea of a GI Joe movie or a new Ghost Rider movie seems like a normal day at the office. But returning after a long absence, as the Flash is, well, returning...is something else entirely. It's like picking up everything you bought that was still pending as a Christmas present and finding out that your gift was the wrong size. If you buy them comic books, it's kind of like opening up your present and finding that it's a used car. That the title of the car that you'd picked up on Craigslist is just the same car, only the color has been changed.

There are new parts, and a new interior. But it still comes in that car that you can't really sell to anyone else. That, of course, is the problem with the Flash. He's not exactly a guy who you can sell to anyone. Like, Bruce Wayne, the Deathstroke, Wolverine, even Reed Richards? Guy's money. They're all genuinely concerned about the guy. He's the anti-superhero. He's like a ghost. He only exists in people's memories. So when you think of the Flash, the Flash you're thinking of is the Flash that you remember. And the Flash that you remember is a Flash who is dead. And Flash, as we know, is dead. Can that old feeling be brought back? Well, no. Not really. It would be nice, yes. It would be romantic. But it would also be ridiculous to expect that it could be so, even for 6d1f23a050
