Simple Instructions: Print, Cut & Paste to the Wall.Pneumatosis Pyloroduodenalis in a Patient With Primary

Sclectosing Cholangitis. Pneumatosis pyloroduodenalis is a rare disease in which gas forms in the pylorus and duodenal mucosa. We describe the case of a 41-year-old male patient with primary sclerosing cholangitis, who presented with epigastric pain, fever, and dyspepsia. A contrast-enhanced computed tomographic (CT) scan of the abdomen showed gas within the wall of the duodenum, pylorus, and neck of the gallbladder, with multiple para-aortic lymph nodes. Magnetic resonance (MR) imaging with water-suppressed T2-weighted sequences showed hyperintensity of the wall of the duodenum, pylorus, and neck of the gallbladder, with multiple para-aortic lymph nodes and fluid within the lumen of the duodenum. The patient underwent surgical removal of the wall of the duodenum and pylorus, and a diagnosis of pneumatosis pyloroduodenalis was made. After surgery, there were no gastrointestinal symptoms, and the patient was discharged. We emphasize the difficulty of detecting and diagnosing this disease and the need to consider this condition in the differential diagnosis of digestive tract disorders associated with pneumatosis.
