hemoglobin by sanguinaria

(purpurin), a natural hemoglobin activator. Sanguinaria, a naturally occurring substance in the plant Sanguinaria canadensis, is a well known pyridine derivative, which when ingested in high doses leads to tetanic spasms and delayed lethal effects. The hydrolysis of intact hemoglobin by sanguinaria has been studied by means of potentiometry, UV spectrophotometry and high-performance liquid chromatography (HPLC). The hydrolysis of hemoglobin by sanguinaria is much faster than the auto-hydrolysis of the protein. The reaction follows second order kinetics, obeying the overall pseudo-first order law. The interaction mechanism that controls the decomposition of hemoglobin in the presence of sanguinaria involves two independent pathways, according to the concentration of sanguinaria. The nature of the reaction rate constants obtained for the unligated and ligated forms of hemoglobin after sanguinaria hydrolysis are discussed. It is concluded that the reactivity of the chromophore of hemoglobin cannot be responsible for the activation of hemoglobin by sanguinaria. It is likely that the covalent binding of sanguinaria to hemoglobin involves the activation of hemoglobin, due to the interaction of the hemoglobin molecule with different species of sanguinaria.
