Kotschyinae, described by Stentore in 1976, includes two species of Terebellidae inhabiting small caves in the Island of Java in Indonesia. One species is endemic to Java (Kotschyina javanicola Stentore, 1976), and the other is found on Sumatra (Kotschyina speciosa Stentore, 1976). The two species differ in the cephalic sensoria, the type of labial papillae, and cephalic furrow 1. Kotschyina javanicola and Kotschyina speciosa are distinguished using newly obtained morphological data. Kotschyina javanicola has the whole lamella of sensillum F1 extended laterally and medially (two lamellae), and Kotschyina speciosa has the anterior lamella of sensillum F1 incomplete, the two lamellae short, and the terminal lamella of sensillum F1 lying in a straight line. This study found two new species among the adult individuals collected from a single cave, Hulu Dian in the Jakarta Basin (northwest corner c6a93da74d
