ALTERSON (Photo by JEN FARIELLO) OASIS R. ALTERSON OASIS R. ALTERSON was a teacher and writer who taught at Yale University from 1951 until his retirement in 1995. He is perhaps best known for his essay collection, The Gap in the Soul: The Literary Imagination and Aging (Oxford, 1980). Early in his career, Alterson was "the subject of a perceptive case study" by Leon Wieseltier in a review of his book My Third Life: Autobiography and the Novel (1971). Wieseltier opens his review by arguing that a poet, like a painter or musician, is a kind of modern-day shaman. Alterson's life followed a similar course. He went to Yale in 1951, then in the mid-1960s he had a nervous breakdown. Recovering, he left teaching and retreated to a farmhouse in Connecticut to write poetry. Alterson's first book was The Gap in the Soul (1960), a collection of short poems. In The Gap in the Soul, poems range from free verse to decasyllabics, from the classical to surrealism, and from the archetypal to the absurd. "Convocation," one of the longer poems, contains the following lines: "No man, not even a president, is beholden / to the glory of his own eyes. / For he only attains it by forgetting / the ash-gray of the sun; he only subsists / in that self-congratulatory illusion." However, Alterson is not merely a poet of the contemporary scene; he is an urbane man of letters with a great appreciation for writers past and present. In a review of Geoff Dyer's Out of Sheer Rage (1974), Wieseltier writes, "The early O c6a93da74d
