You should also know that the packet RNDIS is sent after creating the IP Socket. The initial part of the Ethernet packet contains a unique identifier (hardware MAC address). When the IP Socket is created by this identifier, it holds the IP packet after the Ethernet packet. In a loop, the IP and Ethernet packets are sent after each other. The IP packet contains the destination IP address and the Ethernet packet contains the source MAC address. The packet RNDIS is sent after the Ethernet packet. Packet RNDIS is sent in a separate RNDIS Packet, which contains standard NDIS RNDIS message (used by RNDIS protocol). The message contains the MTK MAC address, the IP addresses of the client and of the server, and some data. The data depend on the message, for example: Message TypeDataID 0x0000 0x80 : Reserved 0x81 : Reserved 0x82 : Reserved 0x83 : Reserved 0x84 : Reserved 0x85 : Reserved 0x86 : Reserved 0 0 ALCATEL ADB RNDIS Driver For MTK SP 2013 03 2966 The data in the packet are used by the device which receives the packet to identify the client connected to the modem. This data can also be used in the message "connect" to the NDIS driver. The local IP address of the device (which receives the packet) is the local IP address of the device that receives the packet. The IP address of the remote device is the IP address of the IP address of the remote device. In the message "connect" of the NDIS driver the address 10.10.10.1 is used.
