the film is a research study of the production of the animated short film, an analysis of the filmic conventions and themes in the film, a study of the author's method of production and self-reflection, and an examination of the relationship of the artist's work to contemporary modes of production. this paper analyses the production of the film, within the context of an emerging practice of contemporary animation. the paper is an examination of the traditional construction of animated films, from the script to the audience, and the relationship of the film to its context, and the relationship of the artist and the form.

this paper focuses on a study of the biography and work of director/ animator, shirokani, one of the most important figures in contemporary japanese animation. through an examination of his work, this paper argues that japanese animation is a distinctively japanese product, created through a uniquely japanese set of problems and solutions. it also argues that japanese animation is unique because it is influenced by two related historical and social currents: the anti-capitalist movements that were part of the workers' movement in the 60s, and the unique japanese colonial experience in asia.
