Legal English (LEG) is an important aspect of legal communication and legal English is part of the English communication competence of lawyers and legal professionals. The choice of English in legal documents is either local or English, depending on the field of law and the legal system in the place in which the document is to be used, and on the needs of the readers of that legal document. In some cases, lawyers and legal professionals need to learn the English language in order to have a sound knowledge of the law. English competency among legal professionals in developing countries is weak, yet the adoption of the English language in countries of the developing world is growing, as English has become the lingua franca of the global internet and all of its proliferating social networks. Given the imperative to share legal information to global audiences, globalizing the English of the law can be an important part of the work of the professional legal and human rights community. The use of English in any form of communication is subject to the need of an appropriate model for analysing the corpus of text (Spache and Janowicz 2004). An important feature of the language of law is the use of legal terminology, which is almost unique and must be mastered by legal practitioners. The English legal language includes many legal terms, legal maxims and legal expressions, which have the flavour of the legal world, but it is not a rule-based language, because rules for different areas of law are broadly similar. The numbers of people who are active in online English editing are small, but growing at a time when the internet is becoming the main source of communication for people in the developing world. And the people who are editing and posting legal texts online, are legal professionals in their countries, who are, as a community, in a unique position to share knowledge and understand legal language as a valid choice in a global community.
