once the windows xp iso is copied to the usb flash drive and the bootable disc is ready, click on the "run" button to start the setup process. you'll then be given the chance to confirm that the usb drive is indeed bootable, and if you are installing over a different os, you'll be asked to confirm the operating system you want to use. you'll then be prompted to choose which partitions you want to install windows xp to. windows xp will be installed to the first partition. you can choose to manually choose the partition, or the partition will be chosen for you. you can also choose to manually set the size of the partition. once the size is set, click on the "change" button, then click on the "advanced" tab. you'll then be given the chance to change other partition settings like the partition type, and whether you want to use an encrypted partition. if you're using an older machine, especially if you're using a machine with limited usb port capability, you might want to read up on our rufus tutorials in a more efficient manner. there's also some good tips over on windows answers (in the troubleshooting section) once you've made your decisions, you'll have to transfer the files from the bootdisk to the internal hard drive. you can use gparted to copy them over, or you can simply drag and drop them into their respective folders. you'll want to give the flash drive a name, and, as of windows xp, right click on the flash drive icon in my computer and select create a new folder to create a folder for it. you can then copy over all of the required files to make your flash drive a bootable xp disk, including the cd/dvd drive, etc.

i have a problem with my hdtv. i am running windows xp on my desktop computer (a compaq presario v3000) and a windows 2000 box on my hdtv (a samsung 40gl61) connected via a vga video cable. i had been having problems with the resolution on the hdtv so i went to run some updates and it gave me an error message that said that something was corrupt in the os. after doing a system restore, i still have the problem. i also ran windows update. it updated the drivers for the vga display card and the scsi hard drive controller. after updating, the resolution is now right, but i can't see the windows xp desktop. instead i just see a black screen with a mouse pointer. i can move the mouse pointer around and see a cursor on the right side of the screen, but not the desktop. i did some googling and came across a couple of pages that recommended i format the hard drive using the windows xp cd. after doing this, i still didn't see the desktop. i have also tried to install the operating system on a second hard drive and run the operating system off of it, but it still didn't work. hi brad, the only real problem i have had installing xp on my mini is that the hdd will not boot properly from the usb i have prepared to install from, and yes i have changed the boot order to usb in bios. i would like to download the intel chipset drivers from your website and burn to a cd for the pen drive but i can not find the link for them on your site, can you please help keep up the good work, even though i am a windows user. regards adnan. brad, i have a mini 110 netbook, i have loaded windows xp professional and the drivers for that, but when i start my netbook it boots into a command prompt, i have looked at the web site and it appears to be a common problem, but as i am a windows user i am not sure how to fix it. i would like to know how to fix this problem if anyone has any ideas. regards, gavin 5ec8ef588b
