players begin a match with three attributes that affect their fighting abilities. strength determines how much damage the player can do. dexterity determines movement and weapon stability. luck determines whether the player is hit or not. strength also affects the gladiators each player has access to, depending on level and ranks. strength determines how much damage a gladiator can do before they die, and the higher the rank, the more gladiators it can provide. a player may also attach up to three gadgets to their character. at the starting, players choose their chosen class, and then choose one or more equipment to customize their character. class begins in the class hall, where the player can change one or more of their current attributes, as well as equip new equipment. a class hall is where all classes start off, for the player to choose between combat, light, and stealth classes. from there, the player can change three attributes: strength, dexterity, and luck. a player may also choose a team of three gladiators, and equip them with gear suited to their fighting style. a map editor allows players to create their own maps, which can then be played using the official multiplayer tools. players can also create their own equipment to give to their gladiators to better customize their style of play. players can also change the names of their maps, and community maps can be published to this resource after the map is submitted. players can download maps from anywhere they are connected to the internet. health points are used to represent life in the arena. the longer players survive, the more points they will earn. health points are restored at the end of each round, and after a player is defeated, the arena will score the player's points and reward them with credits. after players are defeated, the arena will score their performance and award each player for a particular class/team a bonus based on their place in the standings. 5ec8ef588b
