like many miniclip games, miniclip points, originally referred to as 'miniclip coins', originally used in miniclip games' transactions and trades to buy skins, cardbacks, event tickets, and other virtual items for use in other miniclip games. for example, the purchase of a miniclip point for a yu-gi-oh! duel arena (formerly known as 'yu-gi-oh! duel monsters') card back could be used to get more of a particular card in another miniclip game. on march 30, 2014, miniclip changed the currency type for miniclip points, and renamed them to miniclip credits. due to the large amounts of miniclip credits used, they then decided to change the currency type again on may 19, 2014 for miniclip credits, and renamed them to miniclip points. on the one hand, the games lack of a real online multiplayer part is a bit of a letdown. but on the other hand the game does contain many modes in which you can play against other people, either online or offline. the game also offers a chance to use your own deck, which you can build yourself or buy from a store. this really is a great game for both those who love yu-gi-oh and those who love to build their own decks. on the other hand, the games lack of a real online multiplayer part is a bit of a letdown. but on the other hand the game does contain many modes in which you can play against other people, either online or offline. the game also offers a chance to use your own deck, which you can build yourself or buy from a store. this really is a great game for both those who love yu-gi-oh and those who love to build their own decks.

in-game promotions will have various rewards for players, such as credits or energy drinks. in-game promotions can be seen by members on their profile page and will also be listed in the promotions section of the memory lanes lobby. trading happens when two players have an item/resource that they want to sell or buy and go into the "exchange" tab of a memory lane. players can see the list of items for sale and the items they want to trade and even place offers. the system will determine the best matches based on the offers placed and traded items of both players. once the system calculates the best match for a player, it will send them a message indicating that a trade has been placed and they can confirm a trade by claiming the item/resource. trading items will have an in-game value, which can then be converted into fuel using the trading rate set by the game. the trading rate can be adjusted once per day, via a store menu, and each item/resource cannot be traded back and forth in one trading session. each player can also set a specific amount of money they want to spend per in-game credit. if a player has more credit than the trading amount, the remaining credit will be added to their trading balance. players can set this and can set their trading balance to zero to sell all their items for 100 fuel to obtain a single energy drink. trading window lengths can be adjusted in the settings menu. the duel arena is a free to play game and offers both continuous and premium services such as cards, energy drinks, and a streamlined trading system that makes finding items/resources easier than ever before.
