Downloading a movie and not having the proper software is far less common than downloading a movie that doesn't even have any subtitles. If you try to open a video file in QuickTime, if there aren't any subtitles included, it will just play the movie by itself, which is a problem because it looks like you're watching the movie for free. If there's not subtitle included in the movie, we'll be watching the movie for free. Fortunately there are some excellent programs available that can download video without needing a codec. HD videos usually have different video resolutions than standard definition video files. If you want to download HD video files, they usually have a suffix that identifies the resolution. So you usually have to look for HD videos with the suffix ".mp4" or ".h264". You'll also need to look for a common resolution if you want to download it, which depends on the movie in question. For example, the movie I'm talking about has a resolution of 1920x1080, so it would be "1920x1080.mp4" if you want to download it. 5ec8ef588b
