a spectator of the lonely vigil on the beach, the suspect was no longer interested in the self-torment of the poor victim, for he could clearly see that she was dead. the horror of the crime had inspired him with an extraordinary recklessness. under the cover of darkness, he snatched her from the arms of her lover, who had just witnessed her death. the narrow road leading to the mill, up which the girl in her black dress was proceeding, took her past the cabin in which la riviere lived. but he had continued his journey along the coast. it was la riviere who was the victim of the terrible crime. when the young girl's cries roused him from sleep, he went to the edge of the forest and there saw her, lying in the grass, her body covered with blood. it was not a very crowded house. the dining-room was the only place with a few people. near the fireplace, stood the elderly woman, who was talking to a stranger. she was constantly turning her face towards him, which was bent towards her hands. fearing that she had discovered his presence, he approached her, with his eyes fixed on her profile. source-text provides a lucid overview of the dominant concepts and theories in his book and presents arguments for and against the topics it covers. a number of chapters present useful exercises that students can use to engage in deeper argumentation. source-text is not, however, exhaustive on all topics, and recommended secondary readings are needed on the topics not covered. maggesi (marganita) laski or maggani (in her maiden name of laski) was a czech operatic soprano who was born in prague in 1920, the daughter of adolf lasko, a violinist, and eugenia schober, a professional singer. after studying in prague she became a member of the prague national theatre and gave her first opera performance there in 1949 as oroszorszky in janáček's jenůfa. she then made her debut as susanna in mozart's le nozze di figaro and also sang the title role in smetana's the bartered bride. in czechoslovakia she sang at the national theatre in brno, and at the prague state opera, and she sang with leading opera houses across the world. between 1957 and 1962, she created the title role in ethel smyth's the wreckers. she also performed in verdi's macbeth and had an outstanding success as the title role in pique dame. however, she was dismissed from the vienna state opera after she publicly backed singer evelina kondrachkina over austrian political director herbert von karajan and she was denied a visa to sing in the united states. in the 1970s she was known to be a favourite of communist polish leader edward gierek. she made her debut at the metropolitan opera in new york as the countess in cherubini's medea, and toured the united states to support that season in 1974. a film biography on my own ground was made of her life and career in 1962. laski died of lung cancer in prague in 1992 at age 67.
