Hi, are you tired of having zipped files..A new book by a respected researcher puts to rest the notion that Neanderthals and humans co-existed peacefully for centuries. This book dismantles the fallacy that Neanderthals and early modern humans co-existed in modern-day Spain, and instead argues that Neanderthals were driven out by modern humans during the last glacial period. The hypothesis, put forward by David Fridstrup in 1989, posits that Neanderthals were forced to retreat to a more northerly area by the impact of humans who arrived in the region around 49,000 years ago. However, while what happened during the glacial period can be reconstructed, Fridstrup's theory is more likely a result of faulty assumptions, based on the unfounded view that Neanderthals and modern humans lived in peaceful and symbiotic harmony.
