IPscanView is a simple, easy-to-use tool that checks a specified IP address for a firewall, router, or host using ping, and displays the status of each subnet. This handy tool can also retrieve information about the address, such as who is logged on, which users are in the local groups, if the system allows remote login, and what services are running on the network. IPscanView displays the results in an easy-to-read table format. It also supports color-coded results to make the table columns easy to see. The program is quick to scan because it does not need to ping the address or run a netstat command, and does not need to restart the computer, as some other software does. IPscanView has a simple, easy-to-use interface and provides basic information about the address, as well as user data. The tool can scan a specific network, or can scan all networks in a specific subnet or the entire Internet. The basic scan can be repeated in a user-defined amount of time and can be paused when necessary. IPscanView can be used on its own or in conjunction with the Wireshark network sniffer. This program can be used to test your computer's hardware and software configuration, or to diagnose problems.

IPScanner Description: IPScanner is a program that scans and shows the status of a host and its related information, such as who is logged on and how the system is configured. The interface is simple and you can just scan any IP or MAC address and get the information you're looking for. It scans the system for up to 15 IPs at the same time, so you can quickly get a check of your network. Besides IP addresses, IPScanner can also retrieve information about MAC addresses, DNS name, TCP and UDP ports, processes and services, file sharing status, version of Windows, and other system details. This is an easy way to check the status of your network and network devices. On the downside, you can't configure the program to filter out some IP addresses or MAC addresses from scanning, and it is not possible to save the results. Still, if you're looking for some quick info on your network, IPScanner is a great choice.

What's New In LanSpy?

LanSpy is a very easy to use IP scanner that can check a defined IP and retrieve information about the system. The interface is simple and intuitive, so in case you're okay with the standard settings, you have nothing else to do than to input the IP you wish to scan and start the process. LanSpy shows information such as logged users, global and local groups, password policy, MAC address, DNS name, TTL and RTT, shared resources, opened files, services and processes, TCP and UDP ports and network statistics. Of course, you need access to the scanned computer, so LanSpy may fail to retrieve the aforementioned details when scanning certain IPs. Still, the settings screen solves the problem by letting you input an username and password for the scanned system, thus granting access to collect all details. And speaking of the settings menu, besides authentication, you can also configure the operations to perform when scanning an IP, but also port scanning and the adjacent parameters. Another good thing about LanSpy is that it can export the results to XML or HTML, which basically allows you to analyze the information at a later date. Obviously, it needs just a small amount of resources to get the job done and it does not even need to ask for administrator privileges to work properly. All in all, LanSpy can prove to be very helpful, but without access to the scanned system it is not all that useful. Otherwise, it's one of the easiest ways to get info on a specific machine without too much effort.

==== rclark [Q: Проблема с переводом "подписанного"
Сразу прошу прощения за глупый вопрос, но у меня непонятная проблема. Вопрос в заголовке. Я в приведённом примере хотел бы перевести "подписанное" именно на "подписанный". О
