Read this review of the highly popular Windows music and video player/organizer, MediaMonkey: For me, one of the best times of the year is the Christmas/New Year holiday season. The fact that almost everyone will be spending time on their computers adds to the excitement of the occasion. Unfortunately, my PC will only run MediaMonkey 4.0 at a good clip, but I have a Mac version of this software as well as my Windows program. I installed the Mac version and loaded it into the Music directory, much like Windows does. It even says Mac in the task bar area and looks like all the other Mac applications I have installed. Now, how do I put it in the Applications folder and get it to show up on my desktop? I can find the Windows version of this product but not the Mac version. Or... can I? The user manual is pretty slim. It gives no hint of having any options for either the Mac or the PC version. It has plenty of help for both editions of the product but gives no hint as to how the programs are organized within the folder structure. The MediaMonkey website doesn't help at all. The few YouTube videos I have found for this product only show the Mac version. While I am sure the Mac version is easy to install, I have yet to do so. After clicking the link in the user manual
