Endocarbenoids are compounds having a carbocycle and carbene moieties in the same molecule. This class of heterocyclic compounds has been identified in all major evolutionary lineages of life. The majority of endocarbenoids is composed of carbene and carbocyclic moieties. The carbene moiety has been found in carbapenems and cyclic peptides, while the carbocyclic part is a highly diverse ring system. Endocarbenoids also found in other biological active compounds, such as maitotoxin and OA or OA/decarbonyl-OA adducts from snake venom. These endocarbenoids are relevant in fields such as chemistry, pharmacology, and biology. This review focuses on the following endocarbenoids: oxyindoles, indoles, and their hydrogenated derivatives.Automotive Heavy trucks carry the world's goods on the road and to their final destinations.
