Cheque Printing Software can .The major objective of this proposal is to develop a novel, clinically relevant, MRI technique that accurately and noninvasively predicts the presence of acute stroke. This technique, called Amplitude-Ratio Imaging (ARI), will be developed as a rapid pre-hospital screening tool that will utilize the regularity in the amplitude of the magnetic resonance imaging (MRI) signal arising from the expired hypercapnic- hyperaerobic blood of the subjects. The ARI method has been developed with the two objectives of 1) reducing the need for repeated MRI examinations and 2) decreasing the need for specialized devices and expert operators. These objectives are of particular importance in the U.S. which suffers from both: 1) the low rate of use of MRI units and 2) a vast shortage of trained radiologists. The ARI technique uses the regularity in the respiratory-induced amplitude changes in the signal arising from the blood of patients as a surrogate for tissue blood flow changes. It will be demonstrated that healthy subjects exhibit a stable amplitude ratio in the MRI signal which returns to baseline following a single slow inhalation and exhalation. We will measure the amplitude ratio using both conventional T2-weighted multi-planar MRI and
