The present invention relates generally to fluid pumps and, more particularly, to a reciprocating fluid pump that uses suction to perform reciprocating actions. In recent years, reciprocating fluid pumps have been the subject of much attention due to their high energy efficiency and high efficiency. For example, U.S. Pat. No. 6,467,769 issued to Ewing on Oct. 22, 2002 discloses an energy efficient reciprocating vapor compression system that includes a reciprocating fluid pump. More particularly, the Ewing system includes a boiler, a condenser, an evaporator, and a vapor compression device. An inlet port is connected to the boiler and receives a supply of steam that is expanded through the
