The creative automotive industry is one of the world's most demanding and high-paced innovation-driven industries. It's crammed full of incredible stories of fantastic stories of people who dream up, build and sell some of the coolest cars the world has ever seen, and that's why we're particularly excited to announce that Photoshop & Creative Cloud customers will have access to a catalog of 42 original automotive and creative content assets, ready to be replaced with their own car designs. As the world's image editing and creative software king, Adobe obviously has some of the best data in the industry. So what does this tell us? We think it is safe to say that Photoshop users will typically be digital artists, whose work spans across multiple devices – from desktop pc to smartphones, tablets and more. And our numbers back up our ideas – with 84% of users being creative professionals. The second thing we do know is that nearly two-thirds of users are in the field of fashion design. With the availability of new and exciting design projects – offering amazing, new visual possibilities and broader design portfolios – around 5.6 million people will be able to create content without leaving Photoshop. As well as 4.4 million creative professionals in the field of photography, we're also seeing a significant increase in the number of designers using Photoshop for design content creation. Preorderers in the automotive and fashion design will be unique to the industry. And in some instances, designers in those areas will be creating 2,600 stock photos/assets a month, for example, for use in car design and fashion portfolios. So while 'stock photography' is a popular topic on its own, having robust and universal design and automotive content assets has never been more important.

To avoid any confusion, this is the Fireworks component that will continue to be supported by Adobe. If you need to use Fireworks to design, prototype or create interactive graphics then you should continue to follow the Fireworks Updates, as the Adobe Fireworks Update Center . A better way (using the CS5) to link or drag a smart object. If you drag the Smart Filter (or any other smart object) to different part of the image, the smart object will act as mask and will hide everything else. The work area will be set on the location of the smart object. For example: you can use the Clone Stabilization tool to remove a spot or sharpen the image and then link the stroke to the smart object. This will make the smart object, which is the mask, and the work area will be set on its location, so you will not need to move the work area to follow the mask. However, if you do so, you'll be able to link and move the smart object as you want. The work area will not move with the smart object. GitHub is using the Border Type and Inner Glow filters as a powerful "Nudge to Inspire" Site Kit SDK. By placing the "Nudge" filters in a custom-rendered "Nudge" CSS sprite, it becomes a common design element. Let's explore the "Nudge to Inspire" layout with an example.

• Elements Panel is a free panel that helps designers to work faster and more efficiently. It helps designers to manipulate the design without the hassle of opening and closing the layers. Designers can easily drag and drop images. It also helps them to identify the changes that needs to be made and the places to start. The latest version of Photoshop incorporates a couple of different editing features to present new options. Photoshop CS (stands for "Creative Suite") features the option to transform images into panoramas, which combine several photos into a seamless image that can then be stitched together. It also features the new Content-Aware Fill feature that can replace specific colors or regions of an image with nearby content, and the Content-Aware Move, that moves selected areas within the image to meet the available area of space. In other words, the new content-aware fill feature can replace green foliage with foliage that looks like it came from the surrounding area. This can be used anywhere that is difficult to replace with an edited image. The Content-Aware Move feature considers content and objects that already exist in the image, and moves it around accordingly, which allows more accurate rendering of movement and deformation. This is a hugely useful feature for anything that moves or deforms objects. The dynamic camera features, the latest version of Photoshop, adds new features such as the ability to add animations, scroll, and zoom shadows while you shoot. This allows for constantly changing visual effects for any still or animated scene.
