Lennon explained that Adobe has recently made its AI capabilities available to educators so they can make better judgment decisions about what's best for their students. That includes adjusting images, including white, black and grey balance. "We're ultimately about helping people to explore, manipulate and create," Lennon said. For the Facebook community, another plus is that you can use Facebook directly from within the application. "We can help them quickly," Lennon said. "That means less clicks and less time." In a chat with VSCO President and Creative Director Devin Le, Lennon introduced the VSCO camera for video. An app for landscape or portrait, it's optimized for HD, but also works with regular, S-Log (250/512), S-Log2 (500/1024) or S-Log3 (1250/2048) cameras. "It's a great capture tool for photographers," Lennon said. Today, they will ship the film emulsion, in the camera and in the application. It later goes to the lab.
